

Working for a Living: The Workplace Beat
Monday, March 13, 2006

MONICA VIEDLER

Hello. So I'm a market editor, there are four market editors at Domino and basically what that means is we pick out all the products that are featured in the magazine. You've seen Domino, it's heavily product based. we literally travel the world to look for new products. There's shows in London, Paris, Milan who are interiors just like it is profession. and since there are only four of us we do travel quite a bit it can be really hard to get face time.

So that's so um... Precedence are a good idea. Usually first thing in the morning is great because we can just go, get our day started that way. Evening events are good too but you know rarely will we be able to leave in the middle of the day. Or you know sometimes people do something from like eleven to two. but you'll find if it's a scheduled appointment we'll try to schedule a nine AM just to make sure that we're able to go other wise a lot of time we can't.

desk sides are good too if you can get them and there are great ways to get them. Send us an email but you can give us a call. If you, if you could call us I would say you know start the phone call like you know is this a good time. The, the worst thing is if you're in the middle of doing something and you pick up the phone and somebody launches in to something and you don't know who they are. You know if, if you ask if it's a good time and it is then we'll appreciate that and we'll stop and talk and That's a, you know, great way to get a desk side because it takes the least amount of time for us to, to which would break up our day.

also so press kits I would say, you can email them but a lot of times, you know we get so many emails it might get overlooked. Or you know we might now, we'll start off looking at all the emails that are relevant to what we're working on and we might not get to it. So I would say to send them in the mail is awesome.

We always read all of our mail and we have this system where we open our press kits and look at it, copy what we want to copy and check our name off and pass it around so that we all make sure that we all read everything. So mail, snail mail is really the best way to go.

Always, always, always send pictures. the worst thing to get a press release without any pictures because we're very visual and I want to know what it looks like. I'm, I'm, I'm really happy that there is a great story behind it but I really need to, you know, know what it looks like. We're really about great design and the visuals are very important to us